| February 21, 1888 | Roger W. Woodbury addressing a newspaper publishers convention in Denver said: "Suppose I should say that the Denver Republican and the Rocky Mountain News , after having their type set by machinery, will be printed, folded, wrapped and addressed and delivered to every post office in the state in a minute of time or that they should be instantly printed in every town and city and automatically delivered to subscribers at the instant of printing. The wonderful developments in electricity of which no one can yet tell why should warn us that the impossibility may no longer exist."
